Knocked Out the Poetry.

James Russell Lowell was dreamily strolling along toward his home in Cambridge one unusually beautiful night. Slowly, with serene, queenly majesty, a full moon was ascending her "sacred throne," pouring her lavish light over all things and softening into semblance of beauty even the ugly outlines of the conventional domestic architecture around about. Daily illuminated by the loveliness of the spectacle, the poet as he passed by the house of the estimable brother man who supplied meat to him regularly for a slight consideration of profit noticed that valuable citizen leaning on his fence and gazing up in a kind of rapt way.

It pleased Lowell to think that the butcher's immortal soul was bathing itself in the flood of semispiritual moonlight, and, pausing, he remarked, "What a beautiful night it is, neighbor!"

"Yes, Mr. Lowell, I was just a-thinkin' 't what a bully night for a slaughterer in this world be!"

"Of course, of course," gasped the poet, besting a hasty retreat.

Cooking Rice.

Rice has a finer flavor if it is washed in hot water instead of cold before cooking.
